

Environmental Values

Forests are interdependent and adaptable communities of flora and fauna – complex webs of life, from high in the canopy to deep in the soil.

They are natural carbon sinks, water purifiers and nutrient recyclers. And because forests live and grow in an unending natural cycle, they are endlessly renewable.

